UNsung HEROES IN THE U. S. SERVICE

Washington, Oct. 20.—Hitherto unsung heroes in Uncle Sam's service were disclosed in a report by E. J. Westhouse, acting director of the bureau of public works of the Philippines, made public by the bureau of inland affairs today. They are the district engineers in charge of improvements in the islands. And officials are convinced by Director Westhouse's description of their duties that the engineers must be of heroic mold or else wedded to their profession beyond the possibility of divorce.

"Were the district engineers to give each project the time required for investigation and inspection in keeping with good engineering practice," said Mr. Westhouse, in reporting that their activities extended over sixty islands and groups of islands, "the twenty-four hours of the day would be more than occupied. His responsibility not only involves correct location of sufficient design and economical prosecution of construction work, but also includes cost accounting, property accountability in the severest form and a multitude of administration matters."
